

Bernie Loveless and Ralph Carello talk with Roland Morsell about getting water for the steam train.

Mr. Loveless: Let me ask you another question about the railroad. Did they have a water tower — where did they put the water in — you know a railroad engine has to have water?

Mr. Morsell: Right up around the bend here. You could see it from down here. ??? around — you go up there and load up with water. Had one there, and then they had one around to the —

Mr. Loveless: Powerhouse?

Mr. Morsell: — powerhouse.

Mr. Loveless: Yeah, well they had one close by here.

Mr. Morsell: Yeah, one close by — great big one you could see.

Mr. Loveless: Yeah, we've seen some pictures of that.

And then they had another one around at the powerhouse?

Mr. Morsell: At the powerhouse, yes.

Mr. Loveless: There was a big turnaround there?

Mr. Morsell: Yeah. When you went up here and you couldn't get water there, then you had to go around to — go up and turn around and —

Mr. Loveless: At the powerhouse to get the water.

Mr. Morsell: — get it out of the powerhouse.

Mr. Loveless: You remember that turnaround they talk about? That triangle turnaround where the engine would back up in there and then pull up on the track, and then back into the station?

Mr. Morsell: Right, yeah. Just like it was going right on back to the District Line. And then after it got up the line a certain distance, there was a switch off on another track. You backed back into that, and then you backed from there all the way around to the pump house.

Mr. Loveless: Yeah, I see.

Mr. Carrello: How did they get water into that water tower? Did they pump it in there or how was it —

Mr. Morsell: Yeah, they pump it in there. They had a pump, some kind of pump.

Mr. Loveless: They had electricity back there.

Mr. Carrello: Yeah, because they had a power station back there.

Mr. Loveless: Yeah, they had a little power station. They had electricity even in the beginning. They had a little bit of lights out on the Boardwalk even.

Mr. Morsell: Yeah.

Mr. Loveless: Yeah.